SALISBURY, April 4 (R). — British and American emissaries, striving to put together an overall peace plan for Rhodesia, will be given a hearing by the country's new multi-racial coalition government when they arrive here towards the end of this week, an administration spokesman said today. But the members of the Supreme Executive Council — white Premier Ian Smith and nationalist leaders Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole and Chief Jeremiah Chirau — said there could be no question of renegotiating the black majority rule agreement they signed last month.

Some problems still open after Carter's tour of Third World

WASHINGTON, April 4 (R). — President Carter was back in Washington today after a week-long trip to Latin America and Africa that achieved some notable successes but left several sensitive problems unresolved. Mr. Carter visited Venezuela, Brazil, Nigeria and Liberia during the second stage of an international tour aimed at improving U.S. relations with neglected countries of the Third World. His experiences were varied, ranging from Venezuelan exuberance over his presence to a frosty reception in Brazil. There was satisfaction in Nigeria over the first state visit by a U.S. president to black Africa. His discussions covered virtually the entire range of problems the United States is trying to overcome — human rights violations, nuclear proliferation, rising oil prices, recession, and white minority rule in Southern Africa. The president did not escape criticism, even in countries friendly to the United States and him personally.

Chastised

This was notable in Venezuela, where President Carlos Andres Perez did not hesitate to speak out against aspects of U.S. policy he disliked. Senior Perez is a staunch supporter of Mr. Carter's campaign to expand human rights and to stop nuclear proliferation. But he chastised the U.S. for what he called talk about debt and a lack of effort to narrow the gap between rich and poor nations. Mr. Carter told his host that was difficult to find solutions to complex problems. Mr. Carter's visit to Brazil turned out to be a little less complicated than the anger of Brazil's military government over U.S. criticism of its human rights record had led observers to predict.

Brazil had also taken grave offence when President Carter opposed its planned purchase of nuclear reactors and a nuclear reprocessing plant from West Germany.

Mr. Carter went out of his way during his visit to say that Brazil's human rights record was improving and that he wanted to reaffirm the traditionally strong ties between Brazil and the United States.

"I think the result of the Brazilian trip was more than we expected," he told reporters.

But U.S. officials said tensions between the two countries were still evident although the president's personal contact with Gen. Geisel was thought to have been useful. The nuclear issue was left totally unresolved.

In Nigeria, the head of state, Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, stressed how a new relationship had been established with the United States following a long period of hostility.

The president made a speech in Lagos strongly opposing white minority government in Southern Africa and pledging efforts to bring about black majority rule in Rhodesia and Namibia (South West Africa).

On South Africa, he and Gen. Obasanjo said they were determined to eradicate "the evil and oppressive system of apartheid."

Mr. Carter also warned South Africa that its relations with the United States would run into new difficulties unless it moved towards a genuine and internationally accepted arrangement for black majority rule in Namibia.

Soviets back PLO in S. Lebanon

BEIRUT, April 4 (R). — The Soviet Union has pledged full support for Palestinian commandos who refuse to turn over their positions in southern Lebanon to United Nations troops, senior diplomatic sources said here today. The sources, in close touch with Soviet foreign policy, said the Kremlin had assured leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) of backing for the guerrillas' refusal to allow U.N. troops to occupy Palestinian positions. According to the sources, the Russians share the PLO's suspicions about the American-sponsored U.N. Security Council resolution on the establishment of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL).

Premier Badran arrives in Benghazi

BENGHAZI, April 4 (Agencies) — Prime Minister Mudar Badran arrived here today at the start of a three day official visit to the Libyan Jamahiriya at the invitation of the First Secretary of the General People's Committee Abdul Ali Al Abeldi.

Mr. Badran, accompanied by Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Hassan Ibrahim and the premier's Press Secretary Hisham Qussous, was met at Benina Airport by Mr. Abeldi and Libyan Foreign Minister Dr. Ali Turekhi and senior Libyan officials.

In an arrival statement Mr. Badran said it pleased him to arrive in Libya and that he was "convinced this visit will herald stronger relations not only between the Jamahiriya and Jordan but between Arab countries at large."

Mr. Badran is the first Jordanian prime minister ever to visit Libya. He carries a personal message from His Majesty King Hussein to the Libyan head of state Col. Muammar Qadhafi. The contents of the message were not disclosed but informed sources in Amman said King Hussein is seeking to further normalise relations with Libya, Libya and Jordan resumed diplomatic relations only

U.S. officers discuss rebuilding Lebanese regular army in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon April 4 (Agencies) — A five-man team of U.S. military officers began talks here today on means of rebuilding Lebanon's regular army to help U.N. peace troops disengage invading Israeli forces and Palestinian guerrillas in south Lebanon.

The group, which arrived Sunday, met with Foreign and Defence Minister Fuad Boutros. A Defence Ministry spokesman here said the talks were designed to determine how $100 million dollars worth of American arms would be used to re-equip the Lebanese army.

The 18,000-man army disintegrated during the nation's 1975-1976 civil war.

The U.S. government pledged the three-year military assistance program during a visit here by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance last year.

Plans to regroup the dismembered army were speeded up after Israel's invasion of south Lebanon March 15.

Finnish Maj.-Gen. Ensio Silasvuo flew to Beirut for talks on deployment of UNIFIL forces along the Litani river that forms the borderline of the 1,250 sq. kms. Israel seized in south Lebanon.

Israel wants the captured salient to serve as a guerrilla-free security belt along its northern flank in exchange for a pullout from the south.

Clash

Israeli forces and Palestinian commandos clashed near Tyra today shortly after the arrival of the commander of UNIFIL.

The force commander, Maj.-Gen. Emmanuel Erskine, had come to inspect French troops stationed in the region.

The clash took place in the Beir Qanoun area, about five kms. south of this port town. There were no reports of casualties or damage in an intermittent exchange of automatic weapons which lasted about one hour, Israeli planes flew over the area several times.

General Erskine made no comment to reporters.

Thinning out

Israel has begun thinning out its forces in southern Lebanon, the army announced in Tel Aviv last night.

The spokesman said that Israeli forces had begun, a week ago, what he called a significant thinning out of troops from the area, into which they moved last month to attack Palestine guerrilla strongholds.

He said the withdrawal timetable was being coordinated with Lt.-Gen. Silasvuo, a preliminary proposal has already been transmitted to him, the spokesman said.

He said the plan for Israel's pull-back from southern Lebanon would be published only after details had been worked out with the U.N.

Only about one-quarter of the 4,000-strong United Nations force have so far moved into place along and south of the Litani river.

Israel has said it will withdraw its forces when the UNIFIL is in place and can prevent the infiltration of armed Palestinians into the south Lebanon region occupied by Israel.

Mexico, Nepal and Senegal pledged to send contingents and U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim expects the peace force to reach 3,000 early next week.

Iraq was reported to have agreed to pull out an estimated 400 volunteers it sent to help guerrillas against the Israeli invasion.

Former Lebanese Premier Takiyedin Solh announced the Iraqi decision after a meeting here with the Iraqi ambassador. Solh said the move was meant to defuse tension and help accelerate Israel's withdrawal.

Accused found guilty, sentenced to death for murder of Sibai

NICOSIA, April 4 (R). — A Cyprus court today sentenced two Palestinians to hang for shooting dead a close friend of Egypt's President Sadat at the Nicosia Hilton hotel, the incident which led to the abortive Egyptian commando raid on Larnaca airport. Found guilty today of the Feb. 18 murder of Mr. Youssef Sibai, editor of Al Ahram, were Samir Mohammad Khadar, 28, and Sayid Hussein Ali, 26.

Stringent security was in force and four jeeps of heavily-armed police escorted the two men to the court.

An execution date of June 1 was set by Mr. Justice Demetriades, president of the three-man Special Assizes, who said the motive for murder was that Mr. Sibai was held to have harmed the Palestinian cause.

The defence said it would appeal.

The two men had pleaded not guilty to murder, although they admitted taking hostages and commandeering a Cyprus Airways DC-8 plane after the hotel lobby shooting.

They were arrested after a battle on the tarmac when Egyptian commandos tried to storm the plane the day after the murder.

Flew with hostages

With 11 hostages and four crew, the two Palestinians had flown to Djabouti in a vain search for refuge then returned to Larnaca. The Egyptians lost 15 dead in the raid, which was opposed by the Cypriot National Guard.

The death penalty is mandatory in Cyprus for premeditated murder, of which Khadar and Ali were found guilty today.

But in 15 years nobody has been hanged here. The president may commute death sentences.

Asked if he had anything to say before sentence was passed, Khadar who has a Jordanian passport, declared: "I am innocent. I did not kill Sibai."

Beyond reasonable doubt

All who has Kuwaiti papers, said: "I am not guilty. I am not responsible for the killing of Sibai."

Mr. Justice Demetriades, the Chief Judge, said the prosecution had proved its case beyond any reasonable doubt. "This leaves no room for doubt in our minds that the two accused killed Sibai in the execution of their well-prepared and preconceived plan," Ha said.

He said Khadar had made "spontaneous and voluntary statements" to a number of the people he and Ali took hostages.

"It was clear that his motive was his belief that Mr. Sibai had harmed the Palestinian cause."

"It was safe to conclude that it was also the motive of Ali, since they had worked out a common plan and executed Mr. Sibai together."

"It had not been established which of the two had fired the three shots from a Soviet designed Tokarev automatic pistol which killed Mr. Sibai, but each had his role in the plan," said the judge.

Referring to the defence argument that there was no direct evidence of a common plan to kill Mr. Sibai, Mr. Justice Demetriades said such direct evidence was very rare.

"Usually, as in this case, it was a matter of inference from the acts of the accused and the facts proved before the court."

Referring to their failure to take witness stand — both made unsworn statements from the dock — the judge said: "In the circumstances this failure to give evidence in their own defence is a factor related to the issue of their guilt."

Ceausescu tells Dayan Israel should pull out of occupied territory

BUCHAREST, April 4 (R). — President Nicolae Ceausescu told Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan today that Israel should pull out of occupied Arab lands as part of a Middle East peace settlement.

The only Soviet bloc government chief to support direct Egyptian-Israeli negotiations, the Romanian leader said a peace accord "should take into consideration the interests of all the peoples of the Middle East."

President Ceausescu conferred for several hours with Mr. Dayan in their second meeting in two days. Mr. Dayan is on a three day visit here to explain Israel's negotiating position.

The government-run Romanian news agency Agerpres said Mr. Ceausescu called for continuing negotiations for a "comprehensive political settlement."

This should lead to withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Arab territories occupied in the 1967 Middle East war, and should provide recognition for the integrity and security of all states in the area, he told Mr. Dayan.

Viable solutions

Mr. Ceausescu urged that all sides concerned should strive for "viable solutions" in accordance with an equitable and lasting peace, Agerpres said.

Romanian officials described the discussions as cordial, Israeli diplomats, who declined to give details of the meeting, said the atmosphere was "very good."

Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei, Mr. Dayan's official host, attended the talks, but the discussion was mainly led by Mr. Ceausescu, officials said. Mr. Dayan leaves here tomorrow.

The Romanian president, who goes to Washington on a goodwill visit next week, was reported keen to offer Romania's diplomatic services in the search for a Middle East agreement.

A good show, Vanessa

Zionists do not like being called hoodlums, because they do not like being confronted with the truth, and so it is doubly gratifying to see someone like the British actress Vanessa Redgrave accept her Academy Award and then go on to use the word "hoodlums" to describe the group of Zionist demonstrators who were protesting her backing for a film that portrays the Palestinians sympathetically. Miss Redgrave is correct. Zionism, as it has been implemented in Palestine, is based on the same principles of hoodlums and violence that characterise any criminal element. The story of Israel is the story of theft, deceit and enormous physical and intellectual terror. But because of the double standard that Zionism's political blackmail has imposed throughout the world, one is not allowed to stand up and tell the truth. But that is what Vanessa Redgrave did in calling the demonstrators hoodlums, and if her controversial act will get more people to thinking about the parallels between professional criminals and professional Zionists, then she should get the thanks of the entire world, and not only an Oscar award for being a gifted actress.

It is quite extraordinary that some people in the audience of the Oscars ceremony would actually boo Miss Redgrave for receiving her award. One has to wonder about the true state of Western societies when this sort of mass terror can be inflicted upon individuals by the forces of Zionism. What of this vaunted cultural and political freedom one hears of so often? Because Vanessa Redgrave has so calmly punctured the balloon of Zionist lies about the Palestinians, is she then to be subjected to the public onslaught of the Zionist forces of destruction? Will her movies now be picketed? Will cinema houses now be approached by Zionist groups threatening boycotts if they show her films? Will Zionism now only confirm what she has said about Zionism, that it is the work of hoodlums? Not only is Vanessa Redgrave a good actress; she is also very accurate in her descriptions of people.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

Under the heading "Jordan's movement" AL RAY editorially said Tuesday that the cabinet meeting Monday under His Majesty King Hussein comes at one of the most critical stages the Middle East has undergone.

In the course of its lengthy session the cabinet discussed the current situation, the responsibility for building Arab solidarity, regulating joint Arab action and shouldering urgent duties which should be borne by the Arabs to defend their rights, security and national integrity, the paper says.

It adds that Prime Minister Mudar Badran's visit to the Libyan Jamahiriya fits within the context of these moves to bolster Arab solidarity and joint Arab action in which Jordan has always believed in.

AL DUSTOUR analyses the meaning of the recent big demonstration in Tel Aviv by the so-called Movement for Peace Now which was organised by Israeli reservist officers.

The newspaper says the movement by the army reservists indicates that a large segment of the men in Israel's army and part of the mainstream of Israeli society are not convinced of the soundness of their government's present policy. At the same time, the newspaper adds, the movement's taking to the streets to express itself means that a new "inter-action" is taking place on the Israeli scene which "might create an organisation or a new party opposed to Menachem Begin's policy on peace."

Such interaction refutes the Israeli prime minister's allegations that Israeli public opinion as a whole is standing behind him.

However, it is premature to fully assess the political trends within this movement because up to now it has not defined its attitude towards the right of Palestinians to determine their own future or towards the question of Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories despite its call for "territorial concessions", AL DUSOUR says.

TO ALL TELEX SUBSCRIBERS

Last year we received a telex rates schedule from your administration which included among other information, the chargeable duration for telex calls via various carriers serving Jordan.

In 1977 we received agreement from your administration through our representative Mr. Egan, to apply 1+1 charging for calls between Jordan and the USA, Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Mr. Greenish who recently had the pleasure of visiting your country brought back with him a published rate, schedule and much to our surprise we find that these points are still being shown as 3+1 on the rate schedule. This also is reflected in the traffic figures for the year 1976 in that WUI received only 5 per cent of the USA destined telex traffic from Jordan while transmitting to Jordan 32 per cent of the traffic originating in the USA.

On March 1, 1977 a telex was sent to your administration (telex no. 1221 AB JORTEL JO) advising you that WUI applied 1+1 charging for all countries listed with certain minor exceptions.

It would be appreciated if your telex rate schedule could be amended to reflect 1+1 charging for WUI for service to the following points:

Abu Dhabi, Alaska, Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bermuda, Botswana, Canada, Canary Islands, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dubai, Ecuador, Egypt, Germany-East, Guam, Guatemala, Hawaii, India, Iraq, Indonesia, Iran, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Korea, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Malawi, Martinique, Malagasy, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, Antilles, New Guinea, Papua, New Caledonia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Puerto Rico, Qatar, Rhodesia, Saipan, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, South Africa, Swaziland, Taiwan, Tanzania, Trinidad, Tunisia, Uganda, Upper Volta, Upper Volta, Uruguay, USA and Venezuela.

The health situation needs a doctor

There are two basic supply demand incompatibilities in the health situation in Jordan. There is an honest effort being exerted to resolve the situation, but so far the incompatibilities remain.

First, the supply of fresh graduates doctors seems to be more than the available health facilities can absorb. Actually, there is a glut in the M.D. market at large. On the other hand, the market is still in need of trained nurses. Their supply is growing at a very modest rate. The nurse/doctor ratio is therefore declining.

Second, even among doctors, an incompatibility exists. Specialised doctors are growing in number, particularly in prestigious branches like cardiology and neurology.

Although these specialisations are important, only five to ten per cent of the population require the services of such specialists. The other 90 odd per cent still draw mainly on the services of experienced general practitioners.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) has set the year 2,000 as a target date for comprehensive mass health care. Jordan not only wants to comply, but needs to do that right now in terms of human capital planning in the health sector. Not enough general practitioners are available, and there are specialised doctors for whom jobs are scarce.

These two incompatibilities serve as an excellent example of the urgent need for human capital planning in Jordan. This need becomes more evident in three basic sectors, namely: administration, health and education.

Concerning the health problem, it must be pointed out that health care is one of the most vital social services extended to the population at large. Yet it is divided between the government (civil & military) and the private sectors. In each of the two sectors it is fragmented.

Capital deepening which is often talked about in the context of physical capital is needed in the context of human capital. Such deepening may begin by bringing to equilibrium supply and demand.

However, the demand for medical doctors is the sum of the demands for each different specialty. It is necessary to understand that the demand for a pediatrician is not similar to that for the M.D. populations.

Once this differentiation sinks deep into our minds, we will be on the way to a solution of the problem. That will be the day when our health problems emerge into the light of day, and vanish.

EEC members approve new credit terms for sales to poor nations

LUXEMBOURG, April 4 (AP). — Governments of the nine Common Market countries today approved new terms for government-guaranteed credits, under an accord with the United States and other big exporters, on the sale of goods especially to the poorer countries of the world. The object of the pact is to prevent the sellers from bidding against one another for business by offering lower interest rates and easier terms.

Minimum rates range from 7.25 per cent a year on two to five year credits for the poorer countries to eight per cent for the relatively rich when they pay over periods of five to eight and a half years. Creditor countries have agreed not to disclose which countries are considered as belonging to different categories. These are based on the average production of a country's citizens. The industrialised countries are obviously the richest, the communist countries are considered "intermediate" and the former colonial areas are the poor. Cash payments must amount to 15 per cent and the minimum credits are to be for ten years.

Terms of the agreement were negotiated in Paris in February. They went into effect officially on April 1.

Meanwhile Danish Foreign Minister K. B. Andersen, speaking for his Common Market colleagues, set five priorities for improving the economic situation, EEC sources said. The five points were measured to fight unemployment, reducing energy imports, combating protectionist tendencies, restructuring industry and giving developing countries more aid.

EEC sources quoted Mr. Andersen as saying the nine agreed on the main themes and believed they should examine the wider context of the whole Western industrialised world, particularly Japan and the United States.

Israeli labour unrest grounds El Al Airlines

TEL AVIV, April 4 (R). — Israel's El Al national airline was grounded this morning when maintenance men and administration clerks held union meetings during working hours.

Flights were expected to begin taking off at mid-day. Elsewhere in the country's troubled labour scene a two-day strike by newspaper journalists ended, but radio and television journalists remained on strike over pay demands.

Shipping sources said the country's longest-running strike, a seven-week-old stoppage by merchant seamen, appeared close to settlement, but teachers threatened to walk out tomorrow to back pay demands.

The El Al employees denied they were on strike, saying they met this morning to discuss a management letter advising them that collective labour contracts were cancelled from last Saturday.

From that date, every worker should regard himself as bound by a personal contract with management, the letter said.

The El Al management has for years been trying to bring about an end to negotiations with eight separate works committees seeking wages parity with each other.

It said it had no objection to workers holding meetings in working hours as long as they limited them to the afternoon during the airline's slack take-off and landing period.

Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich said a Ministerial Committee last night had empowered the airline management to close down the airline and reconstitute it on a new basis if it felt such action was necessary.

But Transport Minister Meir Amit told Reuters today a cabinet decision would be necessary to carry this out. Individual cabinet ministers have in the past issued numerous warnings of an El Al closure for reorganisation.

While newspapers appeared again this morning the state-owned radio and television services remain off the air. Newspapersmen went back to work after reaching an interim agreement with publishers who undertook to make an immediate loan to cover anticipated pay increases during a three-month period in which negotiations for a new contract and revised wage scales are to be concluded.

But the Israel Broadcasting Authority said it was not empowered by the government to make such a loan.

Bahrain to invite bids for causeway bridge in November

BAHRAIN, April 4 (R). — Bids for the construction of a $1 billion 24 km. causeway bridge linking this Gulf island state with the Saudi Arabian mainland will be invited in November, a senior Bahraini official was quoted as saying here today.

The Director of the works at the Ministry of Works, Water and Power, Mr. Ali Murad, said. The proposed bridge, which consists of 12 kms. of bridges and 10 kms. of causeways, would be completed in 1983.

IRA likely to affect Irish decision on nuclear power

By Jeremy Bugler

LONDON (F.T.) — Ireland, one of only a handful of European countries which do not generate some electricity using nuclear power, is thinking about joining the nuclear club.

The Irish government will decide shortly whether to go ahead with a plan to build its first nuclear power station. A site has already been chosen on the most south-easterly corner of the island, Carnsore Point in rural County Wexford. Desmond O'Malley, the government minister who will be responsible for the decision, has already made it clear this year that he thinks a nuclear reactor is just what Ireland needs. Supporting him, delegates at last month's annual conference on Flannan, the ruling party, defeated an anti-nuclear motion by a large majority.

Nuclear controversy

But if Ireland is coming late into the nuclear age, she's out lagging in the matter of nuclear controversy. Already two opposition parties, including the principal one, Fine Gael, have called for a full public inquiry before Ireland's Electricity Supply Board orders a £400,000 reactor. Local councillors and farmers in County Wexford do not all take to the notion of a reactor on their doorstep, and the latter columns of the Irish Times are moving onto matters nuclear. The first Irish anti-nuclear demonstrations are being planned.

Ireland's nuclear opponents see help coming from two unlikely quarters: Dr. Edward Teller, nuclear physicist extraordinary, and the IRA. Dr. Teller, known as the "Father of the H-Bomb" and a prominent nuclear advocate, said at the recent EEC hearings on nuclear power in Brussels that there was no case for an Irish reactor.

His reasoning rests on the size of Ireland's generating network — the country has a total installed capacity of only 2,540 megawatts and a peak load of only 1,800MW. Nuclear planners use a rule of thumb that no generating unit should contribute more than 10 per cent of total output. A breakdown in a unit responsible for perhaps 20 per cent of output could throw the whole generating system into chaos, with widespread blackouts.

But Ireland is considering buying a 650MW reactor, either a light water reactor from Westinghouse of America or KWU of Germany, or a heavy water CANDU reactor from Canada. Clearly a 650MW reactor is going to be out of scale in a 2,500MW system.

Ireland's nuclear and electricity advocates counter Dr. Teller by saying that in twelve years' time — the period it would take to build the reactor — installed capacity would be up to 5,500MW to cope with rising demand. Then Ireland's first reactor would only be slightly out of scale.

Peat bogs not bottomless

This fault, argues Mr. O'Malley, is slight beside Ireland's pressing need — a secure source of energy. Ireland relies heavily on imported oil, which fuels 66 per cent of her electricity generation. Her peat-fired power stations, once the joke of Europe's generating men, contribute a useful 25 per cent and hydro-electricity eight per cent. The remaining one per cent is generated from low-quality coal.

Mr. O'Malley is fond of pointing out that his country's peat bogs are not bottomless, the hydro sites are all exploited, and oil is running out, so it comes down to imported fuel in one form or another. He told a Limerick audience that coal was messy and likely to get more expensive. So he is left with the nuclear option.

A few energy specialists in Ireland, such as Dr. Robert Blackith of Trinity College Dublin, argue with this line of thought. Dr. Blackith believes there is no case for a rising electricity demand, for Ireland could do more with less electricity. He says Ireland's energy conservation is non-existent. Many Irish homes use electricity wastefully for heating and cooking, and he points out that even today houses in Dublin are being built without cavity walls that can be insulated.

Determining factor

But the IRA may prove a determining factor. A nuclear reactor in Ireland could give a new dimension to terrorism there. The IRA have shown themselves capable of blowing up electricity installations and major industrial targets. Irish politicians are just becoming aware of the problems they could face if IRA men got control of a reactor building and threatened to damage it unless, for instance, prisoners held in Port Laoise prison were released.

The reactor would in time produce plutonium, either contained in stored nuclear waste or in a purer form after the waste is reprocessed, and there is always the danger of an extremist organisation obtaining fissionable material by stealth or force.

So far Mr. O'Malley, an adroit politician, is avoiding this issue. The nearest he has got to it is to talk about nuclear dangers and soothe his listeners: "The fact is that there are dangers in almost everything we do. It is impossible to live in an accident-free or danger-free world."

Whether Irishmen will accept this assurance or consider that a nuclear reactor poses dangers of a different order may become clear during 1978, when a public hearing on the Irish nuclear power plan is likely to be held.

LONDON MARKET REPORT

Prices closed quietly firm Tuesday with long-dated government stocks maintaining earlier gains of around 1/2 point despite the fall in the currency reserves, dealers said.

Continuing optimism ahead of British banking figures was cited for the firmer tone in gilts. Leading industrial bonds were mostly 3p to 7p higher, following the lead of government bonds but some issues closed slightly below the day's highs. At 15:00, the F.T. index was up 5.7 at 4682.

Mining shares recovered much of earlier falls as the bullion price rallied at the afternoon fixing.

GKN closed a penny easier after fluctuating narrowly ahead of results, while other engineering firms were steady to firm.

Among leaders, ICI closed off the top with a 2p rise after being 4p up, while Fisons met selective demand in this market conditions and rose 12p to around 347p. Ocean Transport and Trading gained 2-1/2p on further consideration of yesterday's results and J. Lyons eased a penny after the company said third quarter results were below expectations.

Australians and Canadians were mixed as the investment dollar premium gained ground.

Prices of gold closed in London Tuesday at $180.50/oz.

Tropospheric scatter system reaches the unreachable places

By Dermot McKeone

LONDON (LPS). — The installation of a telephone link would seem to be simple enough — very often simply a matter of stringing a pair of telephone wires between two communities. But there are times when it is rather more complicated, and when it is not even possible to make a connection by conventional radio.

There could be many reasons. In the first instance, of course, there might be a vast area of ocean between an island community and the mainland. Less obviously, the land separating two communities might be so difficult that erecting the necessary telephone poles would cause severe technical problems.

Efficient and economical

In many cases the problem is solved by substituting a radio link for telephone wires. But this only works satisfactorily if the local geographical and atmospheric conditions are right, and sometimes the quality of the signal, and hence the conversation, is rather poor. But fortunately there are other techniques that make it possible for isolated communities to keep in touch with each other efficiently and reasonably cheaply.

One of these is the tropospheric scatter system. It uses a very narrow beam of radio waves which are aimed at the sky just over the point to be communicated with. The beam is "bent" over the horizon by changes in the atmosphere, and scattered, some of the radio waves returning to earth to be picked up by the receiver station. The system is highly reliable, gives a good quality signal, and — when the costs of the alternatives are considered — it can be very economical. Tropospheric equipment is made in Britain by the Marconi Company.

The strengths of the tropospheric scatter equipment were clearly demonstrated during flooding in Bangladesh. The floods had wrecked important telephone lines between key points, and the rescue services were being seriously hampered by the breakdown in communications. A "tropo" system was hurriedly erected by the authorities, and the vital links were restored.

Nor is the system used only in emergencies. In the West Indies, the island of Barbados is connected with the regional communications network by a tropo link between Barbados and St. Lucia — a distance of well over 180 kms.

80 simultaneous calls

However, it would be wrong to assume that tropospheric scatter is the answer to all communications problems. For a start, the equipment usually is designed to handle as many as Tropospheric scatter aerials at Brimmon Hill in northeast Scotland mark the shore station of the communications link with one of the major North Sea oil fields. The equipment, made by Marconi, is used to transmit ordinary telephone calls and computerised data.

80 telephone calls at once, and it would be beyond the financial reach of most village communities. Some versions are even larger. Marconi makes a 132 channel version for busier routes, and the Barbados installation can carry up to 240 simultaneous calls.

But the equipment operates satisfactorily over a very wide range. It is particularly competitive between 160 kms. and about 725 kms. At greater distances satellite communication comes into its own.

One important development in Britain illustrates the versatility of tropospheric scatter. It is used extensively by the North Sea oil and gas industry to enable offshore rigs to communicate with mainland Britain. Everything from personal telephone calls to computerised data flows back and forth along the tropo channels.

Your cup of tea: Producers and consumers try for international agreement on pricing

By Peter D. O'Neill

LONDON (F.T.) — The British Price Commission's proposal that tea on shop shelves be reduced by up to five pence a quarter has again pushed tea into the headlines and highlighted the plight and problems of producer nations.

The findings of the commission suggest both producers and consumers have a common interest in trying to even out price fluctuations. It is a point which the commodity producing developing countries have long been pressing for — and not just for tea. It comes at a timely moment because the tea exporting and importing countries are trying to establish an international tea agreement. According to tea experts in London, if all goes well, it could be in force within 18 months to two years.

The Food and Agriculture

Organisation (FAO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) have been asked to prepare a report on the feasibility of establishing buffer stocks of tea to even out damaging world market fluctuations.

Time meeting

Countries involved in the tea trade are to meet in June at UNCTAD and if the report is acceptable, the buffer stock scheme would provide the basis for a full international tea agreement.

Among the objectives of such an agreement, apart from buffer stocks, would be intensive promotion of tea and the gradual elimination of trade barriers in the commodity. Particular attention would also be paid to imports of packaged tea and products from developing countries and

Once again the countries who drink tea are trying to get together with those who produce it to work out an international tea agreement. It is particularly critical for the producing countries: after all, the overseas consumer may be able to do without his tea, but the small-holder who grows it cannot stop living until the next good harvest.

the needs of the smallholder grower would also be catered for.

However, the key to the success of any international tea agreement appears to lie with the developing countries. There are differences of approach between the Asian and African producers. India and Sri Lanka are the biggest tea exporters in the world, but several African countries, with Kenya as spokesman, are growing fast and want to be regarded as equals when it comes to deciding how the world market should be arranged. Smaller exporters like Indonesia and Bangladesh want to protect their place.

African countries, including Kenya, Malawi, Tanzania, Uganda and Mozambique, pushed up their tea exports to 139,000 tons in 1976 from about 102,000 in 1970. The Asian countries, excluding China, increased their export sales from 433,000 to 509,000 in the same period. Kenya's own exports during these years went from 34,000 tons to 59,000.

Britain buys most

As far as imports go, Britain is dominant, with imports of 200,000 tons in 1976, about 45 per cent of the tea consumed by developed countries.

The exporting countries were unable to agree on a minimum price system in 1975 and their working party was unable to make any recommendation because of a conflict of interest between the African and Asian groups. Kenya went as far as to refuse to attend early meetings, but has now come round to participating.

The importing countries have been sitting on the sidelines, according to one British government spokesman on tea. They are waiting for the producers to settle their own differences. The British government however believes it has been as active as possible in pursuing the idea of a tea agreement and put forward a draft for one in April 1976. According to FAO statistics, world tea production in 1976 was 1,286,000 tons. Of that total, 1,096,000 tons were produced by developing countries. Of exports of 758,000 tons, all but 75,000 tons were from the developing world.

Soaring prices

Soaring prices in late 1976 were the latest in a series of difficulties which have beset the tea market. Production over the previous three years had only half kept up with world demand. Coffee was rocketing in price too. As British blenders saw people turning more to tea they bought massive stocks of tea in early 1977. At the London auctions, prices went from 88 pence a kilo in September 1976 to 270 pence a kilo in March 1977. Then they fell to 100 pence a kilo around May. The Price Commission estimates that tea blenders more than doubled their aggregate net profits between 1976 and 1977 and that some middlemen increased their net profit to almost 60 per cent of total income.

For all the 1976 price rise, tea's problem was that it was left out of the previous world commodity boom. In 1970 world trade in tea was worth about $493 m, in export value in 1975 it had risen to $799 m. and in 1976, $819 m.

An international agreement would try to smooth out the fluctuations in the world market and try to make sure that in lean and good production years neither the consumer nor the producers suffer.

The small producer is the most vulnerable. If prices drop too far his livelihood is threatened. If there is a bad crop the smallholder again suffers because he has less to sell. In the final analysis the overseas consumer may be able to do without his tea, but the smallholder cannot stop living until the next good harvest.

India exports most

The exporting countries also have to meet their own market demands. India not only exports the most tea, it consumes the most as a nation — 287,000 tons of it in 1976 or about 56 per cent of the British, there would probably be no Indian tea for export. So the aim is to set up a stable and regulated market, with buffer stocks to iron out the high or lows.

There have been agreements before. The first was in 1933, an attempt to restore equilibrium between world supply and demand after a period of declining prices owing to substantially increased supplies and a slump in demand caused by the world depression.

But it was not until the seventies that the producers and importers got together seriously to try to adopt a specific overall approach to international cooperation on tea.

If there are to be tea quotas as well as the buffer stocks, producing countries have to agree among themselves how they are to be decided and how they should be observed. Similarly, they will have to be ready to trust each other on minimum prices and not try to undercut the market to get a bigger share when there is a tea surplus.
